We have been shown a letter of recent date from a gentleman who was in Decatur some time in the summer, in needy circumstances, and who was helped on his way to his friends by the liberality of Martin Forstmyer, Samuel Shelley, W. J. Hammer and a few others. The unfortunate man had been living—or trying to live—among the Tilden men of one of the Southern States, and had, like many others, found no encouragement there for a northern man. Disheartened, and broken both in purse and in spirit, he had succeeded in reaching Decatur with his helpless family, but could get no further because of his utter lack of means. In this plight Mr. Forstmyer found him, and besides furnishing him with transportation to Vandalia for himself and family he supplied his immediate wants from his own pocket, and by the aid of the others named the poor man was able to reach his friends and make a fresh start in life. He now writes to Mr. Shelley, and is profuse in his thanks to those who befriended him in his hour of need. And that's the kind of a man Martin Forstmyer is.

A citizen of New Orleans who does not avow his republicanism on account of ostracism and persecution, on his way home from the centennial called to see Governor Hayes, and after returning to Louisiana, wrote a private letter to a friend in New York, from which the following is extracted:

We stopped over at Columbus, where I had a letter of introduction to Gov. Hayes, which I delivered. I had an agreeable and satisfactory interview. He impressed me as a wise, simple-minded man, fully alive to the importance of the position he occupies toward the country. Whilst he is too sensible to be boastful, he is yet too candid to appear deficient in confidence. If ever a man looked like a president, or as he felt sure of being one, it was the modest, calm, and thoughtful gentleman with whom I passed an hour on Monday last.

A gentleman residing in New York sends to the New York Evening Post the following, which is the report of conversation with an Alabama, who seems to be a particularly "solid" southerner:

The gentleman said to me, the purpose of the south is to get possession of the government through the aid of the democratic party. This done, they will have the power in their own hands to reimburse themselves for their own losses, and if the north refused to pay, it will be rebellious, and the south, having the government, will use its power to compel the northerners rebels into submission.

We intend to have pay for our cotton, tobacco, oil and bonds, and all our losses; not by force of arms, but by legislation, and the re-enslaving of the negro is a certain event. We have the power, politically, now in our own state and we intend to keep it. If the negroes are fools enough to vote, or attempt to, they will easily be made to see that it will be for their interest to keep away from the polls, with one exception, that is not by another. This is quite

SCRAPS.

From the Indianapolis Journal:
It begins to be a question in the minds of many whether Grant surrendered to Lee or Lee to Grant.

The corruption campaign is to begin again. An agent of the democratic state central committee started east last night after funds.

Williams ran badly behind his ticket in Knox county, and in his own township he received 31 votes less than were cast for Hendricks in 1872. They know him down there.

If every republican county in the state will increase its October majority in November in the same proportion that this county certainly will, the state will go for Hayes and Wheeler with a whirl.

1,148 majority for Hendricks in October, 1872, gave Grant 22,000 in November, what will a majority of 5,500 for Williams give Hayes next November? That is a simple question to the rule of proportion.

Why does not the Sentinel publish all the congratulatory telegrams received by it and the democratic state central committee from the "solid south"? Are some of them such as to injure the party?

Two years ago the confederates gained congressmen enough to give a majority in the house. This year they have held their own south, but lost in northern states. The tidal wave on which they hoped to ride into power has spent itself.

It is not likely that Hewitt, chairman of the democratic national committee, will authorize anybody in this city to buy "seven more miles" for the November election. Neither is it likely that the Chicago or Baltimore repeaters will be here, or that the emigration from Kentucky will be repeated.

The republicans in this state rejoice over a gain of four congressmen, one branch of the legislature, and a reduction of the democratic majority from 18,000 to 5,500. The democratic rejoice over holding the state offices by the above reduced majority. In other words, the former rejoice over a substantial victory, the latter that the defeat is made out of whole cloth by yourself.

Among the congratulatory dispatches published by the Sentinel over the election of Williams is one dated Jackson, Tennessee, the home of rabid treason and rebellion, stating that the people are "mad with joy," and that the "bloody shirt" was carried in a procession by an ex-rebel soldier and "buried with appropriate ceremonies."

How much of this sort of stuff will it require to wake up the North to a sense of the peril just before us? Is Jackson, Tennessee, mad with joy because they see hope for the "lost cause" and payment of their losses in the accession of the Democratic party to power? That is the secret of their mad joy. How many States of the North will unite with them in that sort of a revelry?

TILDEN.

Now, we grant freely that Mr. Tilden is a very suitable candidate for the democratic party, especially for the solid south. The party and the candidates just suit each other. Let democrats support him if they choose, and most of them probably will, but we exhort republicans, indeed all the people who believe that the rebellion was not right and that the government was right in putting it down, to work with unceasing vigilance to
